Shop At Your Local Farmer's Market!

A farmer's market is a place where local farmers sell their produce. It is usually held outdoors and often on scheduled days of the week. Produce usually means fruits and vegetables. But at some farmers' markets, farmers also sell meats, eggs, and dairy products, such as milk, cheese, and butter. Food that is sold at farmers' markets is known for being fresh and is often organic. Buyers assume that the food has been just picked or prepared at a local farm. There are a lot of reasons to buy your food at a farmer's market rather than at a grocery store. The following are just a few of them: When you buy food from a farmer's market, you are supporting local farms. This allows the farms to stay in business, which in turn, preserves the farmland from development. Farms can usually sell their food at a much lower price than grocery stores. This is because they don't have to pay as many employees or pay for the food to travel. The food you buy will be fresher and possibly healthier than food bought at the grocery store because chemicals have not been added to it. Since the food does not have to be packed and shipped to a far-away grocery store, it does not contain any additives or preservatives to keep it fresh. Buying food at your local farmer's market also helps the environment because it means your food did not have to be shipped from far away.

1. Farmers' markets only sell fruits and vegetables. (F)
2. Produce at farmers' markets is often organic. (T)
3. Buying food from farmers' markets can be less expensive. (T)
4. Food at farmers' markets is often shipped from far away. (F)

Multigenerational Families

In some areas of the world, multigenerational families have always lived together in the same house. A multigenerational family is a family of different generations, for example, grandparents, parents, and children. In the United States, from 1940 through 2000, multigenerational living decreased. Americans dreamed of growing up, leaving their family home, and having a home of their own. Having one's own home was a status symbol. It showed that a person was independent and financially prosperous. Grandparents, too, seemed happy with this arrangement. They saved enough money throughout their life to be able to live independently through their retirement years and to pay for outside care if they became ill. It has only been in recent years that this trend has begun to change. A slower economy and fewer jobs have caused people to have less money than they once did. Americans are beginning to find it too expensive to live separately. The Clark family from Virginia is a good example of this phenomenon. The Clarks are a multigenerational family that were living in three different houses. The great-grandparents lived in an expensive retirement home, the grandparents lived in their large, old family home, and the parents lived with their two young children in a small apartment. All of the family members were struggling financially. They didn't have enough money to live comfortably in their separate homes. So, the Clark family sold all three of their homes and bought one, large, old, wooden farmhouse that had enough room for all of them to live in comfort together. The Clarks say they are happier now that they are all together. They are now able to share the chores around the house as well as the cost of the house. And, while they were once too busy to see each other often, now they have more time to see each other as well as spend more time on leisure activities. So, for now at least, it looks like the trend of living in multigenerational families will continue in the United States.
