Q2: Reading Comprehension:

Read the passage then answer the questions below:

Some people think that people who live in big cities aren't very friendly. They believe people who live in big cities are always rushing around and too busy to stop and talk to others. In places where there's more crime, people might be scared to speak to strangers. They feel it's safer to not talk to people they don't know. To find out which cities are the most friendly, some researchers did a special study. They traveled to different cities around the world and pretended to need help. For example, they dropped a pen on the sidewalk and waited to see if someone would pick it up. They also acted like they were hurt while walking to see if anyone would stop and help. After doing these studies, the researchers said that the friendliest city in the world was Rio de Janeiro in Brazil. Two other cities that were also very friendly were San Jose in Costa Rica and Madrid in Spain.

The researchers noticed that smaller and quieter cities were usually more welcoming than big, busy ones. People in these places were more likely to help others and be kind to strangers. One city that's growing fast and becoming more popular is Riyadh, the capital of Saudi Arabia. Riyadh is a mix of old traditions and modern buildings, with tall towers like the Kingdom Centre and Al Faisaliah Tower. It's known for being safe and full of culture, with museums, art galleries, and tasty food. The name "Riyadh" comes from the Arabic word "gardens," because long ago it had green areas and oases. Today, Riyadh is a busy city with friendly people who enjoy welcoming visitors and sharing their heritage.
