The game of Life dates all the way back to 1860. It's a board game that takes each player through his or her life from college to retirement. Although there are different versions of the game, the modern version has players making choices about real life events, such as getting married, having children, and changing jobs.

Players spin a spinner to see how many spaces they will move their cars. Each car allows for up to six people so that players can add a spouse and children along the way. There's a bank and opportunity to make money, just as in real life. The object of the game is to make the right decisions. You'll see the results as your cash increases or decreases. For instance, you can earn money by doing good for others. But also just as in real life, not all of the game is in your control!

Everyone wants to know what the future brings and the game of Life allows people to play with those ideas. It's probably why the game is still played today.
