Today, hypermarkets are found in almost every city in the world. Panda, ALOthaim, Carrefour and LuLu are one of the famous hyper markets in Saudi Arabia. Euromarche was the first hypermarket opened in Saudi Arabia in 1981. A hypermarket is different from mini markets or other shops.

People prefer shopping in hypermarket because it is convenient, international and one-stop-shopping. Besides, there are special offers that most customers like. In hypermarkets, goods are placed on open shelves. The customers help themselves to choose what they want and put them in the shopping basket, then take them to the check-out counter. There are usually special shelves in hyper markets for inexpensive items just in front of the check - out counter: such as chocolate, sweets, gum and so on.

When customers reach the check - out counter, they can pay cash or with a bank card. Customers feel glad because their shopping is finished. To give comfort to customers, hypermarkets provide parking areas and stay open until very late at night. Nowadays, many of the hypermarkets become huge shopping centers and malls.

A VISION OF THE FUTURE

The French writer Jules Verne wrote several books in the late 1800s. In them, he wrote about the future. He asked, "What will life be like at the end of the 20th century-one hundred years from now?" In one of his adventure novels (From the Earth to the Moon), his characters traveled to the moon in a rocket. In another novel (20,000 Leagues Under the Sea), his characters dove through the depths of the ocean in a submarine in the shape of a whale. In a novel titled Paris in the Twentieth Century, Verne described a city with skyscrapers of glass and steel, high-speed trains, gas-powered automobiles, and a global communications network. Space rockets and submarines and other things in his novels didn't exist in Verne's time, but many of the inventions that Verne imagined became reality by the end of the 1900s.
