Nelson Mandela was at one time the most famous prisoner in the world. Early in life, he joined a law firm in Johannesburg as an apprentice, where he was exposed daily to the inhumanities of apartheid. Instead of choosing an easy life as a lawyer, he joined the Youth League of the African National Congress and became involved in programs of passive resistance.

His activities landed him in prison. Instead of being crushed, he embarked on a system of self-education. The prison came to be known as "Island University." Previously barren recreation hours were filled with cultural activities. After more than two decades in prison, he was escorted to the State President's office, where he negotiated not only his own release but also the nation's transition from apartheid to democracy.

Sometimes animals are able to survive when their habitat changes because they adapt to the new conditions. For example, birds that were accustomed to nesting on high cliffs or in tall trees have survived industrialization of their habitat by learning to nest in the crevices of tall buildings. Raccoons easily adapt to residential areas that have taken over their woodland homes. They often help themselves to any food they can grab, whether it is in trashcans, or inside people's homes!

(Good Luck)
