Derrick loves live-in job at the tower. He is the only royal Ravenmaster in the world. Derrick Coyle wakes up with the birds- in fact he wakes up before them! Derrick is the Ravenmaster of the Tower of London, and his first job every day is to get the birds out of the cages where they spend the night.

Ravens have been living at the Tower of London since 1660, when King Charles II made a Royal Decree that there should always be six ravens there. This followed an old legend that if the ravens leave the Tower, it will fall, and the monarchy will fall with it.

Derrick has been doing the job since 1999, and has an apartment inside the Tower walls. Before that he was one of the regular beekeepers at the Tower. There is a strict routine to follow every day, checking the birds are healthy, feeding and watering them, and cleaning the cages. At night he put the ravens back inside their cages, to keep them safe from cats and foxes.

The hours are long for a salary of just over £ 20,000, but Derrick loves his job. "It's a lot of fun, and it gives me a lot of pleasure," he says. "The ravens are part of the family. They all have their own characters."
