Reading

Read the passage and then answer the questions below:

Great Expectations was written in 1860 and is one of the most famous books by the great English novelist, Charles Dickens. The main character in this novel is Pip

One dark evening, a small boy called Pip met a frightening man, a convict called Magwitch. Magwitch had escaped from a prison ship on its way to Australia, and he terrified Pip into stealing some food for him. Magwitch was caught (though he did not tell the police that Pip had stolen food for him) and continued to his exile in Australia.

Pip's parents were dead, and he lived with his older sister and her husband, a blacksmith called Joe.

They were poor, and Pip's only opportunity in life was to become a blacksmith like Joe. But one day, while Pip was learning his new job, a lawyer from London visited him. The lawyer told Pip that he had inherited a lot of money from an anonymous benefactor. The only rich person Pip had ever known was an old lady called Miss Havisham, who had been friendly to him when he was a child.

The lawyer told Pip that he must go to London immediately where he would have enough money to study and become a gentleman. Sometime later, Pip discovered the true identity of his benefactor – it was not Miss Havisham, but Magwitch, the convict he had helped all those years ago and who had just arrived back in London. In Australia, Magwitch had become a rich farmer and had decided to help the boy he had terrified so long ago. However, the police were hunting Magwitch because he had escaped from his Australian exile. Pip tried to help the convict escape, but finally Magwitch was caught and died in prison.

Reading

Read the passage and then answer the questions below:

Detective films are developed around stories of criminal actions and include elements of mystery and suspense. Dramas, on the other hand, are serious films, portraying realistic life situations, character development, and interaction. They include a number of subcategories, e.g. melodramas, biographies, or "biopics." Epics are usually costume dramas, historical dramas, or war dramas in extravagant settings and lavish costumes. They are sometimes a more spectacular version of a biopic film, such as The Last Emperor.

Horror films are designed and produced to frighten audiences. They are sometimes combined with science fiction when, for example, Earth is invaded by an alien monster. Science fiction films, on the other hand, are often visionary with futuristic technology and extraordinary creatures from outer space. One of the most famous examples of this genre is E.T.
